Mr. Stanbery's Letter Denying the Authorship of the Opinion Concerning the Additional Session of Congress.

Special Despatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18, 1867.

Attorney-General Stanbery published a letter this morning, denying the authorship of the opinion concerning the convocation of Congress, which appeared in the Intelligencer, and was extensively copied in all parties, and attributed at the White House to reflect the views of Executive circles. He does not, in the letter, descend from the dignity of his official position, but simply says that the opinion was given from the standpoint of forbidding opinions to be given on questions that have not arisen, and are not likely to arise, and therefore, for the following reasons:

Inasmuch as I could be allowed to say that I had not given that opinion, and that it was not in accordance with the views entertained by me, I am compelled to decline to say anything on the subject. I have not been accustomed to receive, when in office, newspaper criticisms of my official acts, and the particulars are given, and those only, which are necessary to my defense.

The Washington (Tenn.) Gazette says that the Hon. Andrew Johnson and General Sherman for the next Presidential ticket, and called a grand political meeting to be held here on the 15th of December. That day came, and it was announced that the meeting would be postponed till the 21st of November; but the correspondent had been told by many distinguished persons, and the Gazette says that the meeting will be an enthusiastic affair. This swing the day on which the proposed ratification was positively to take place, a glowing report was expected in the Democratic papers of the Union. Journal, however, not only has no report, but says the meeting, on account of the recent elections, and for other satisfactory reasons, was indefinitely postponed to the 4th of January next.

The Secretary of the Treasury is about to be under consideration in the Attorney General's office. It appears that the Florida Indians of New River, who have been at war with the whites for years, and against whom the ordinary arm of hostilities, have still been limited as effectually as ever, have recently been [illegible] Many of their bands are incorporated by law, with the usual powers of buying and selling.
